

...people we can march forward in 1962 to better goals and important new achievements. May we be reminded that forgetting with discrimination is just as important as remembering with accuracy. At the year's end let us drop our mental and moral debris—forget our grudges (their wrongs were in the past), forget our health and yet humoring our nerves. Admitting we believe we have great life, let us triumph despite them. Let us forget our worries, our doubts, except to learn from them. Let us forget our doubts and move on and up. Let us try to forget that someone that was not at the board this Christmas and thank God that he is alive and well, let us forget that we might have been forgotten this time. Let us be up and doing and move onward and upward.

Nathan Howard Gist wrote an article entitled "The Fresh Beginning," which says: "Let us make the new year worthy of its name, a year bound to be fulfilled with good things. We must not say a task cannot be done unless we have tried it. Success begins at the point where fate seems to say, 'Nothing doing.' Let us find what is right with this world, and what is wrong with ourselves. This is not the darkest period of history, the most hopeless, the most uncertain, nor will our thinking make it so. The world is getting better; people are wiser; most have better than we deserve; God is greater than had, right outweighs wrong.

Hence a fresh beginning. Let us think below the surface and for ourselves. Think more of our duties and opportunities than of our whims and ill luck. Let us find happiness, but not ease, contentment, but not surrender of the moral ideal, better ways to do our work, but not at the expense of diligence, a new field of endeavor if it brings out hidden powers and full expression of moral idealism.

Let us truly have a happy New Year!

When you speak, shout or sing, the sound waves produced by your vocal chords may strike some object and be thrown back to you.

Particularly this is true if you are in a deep valley between two steep hills or if you are in a large auditorium. The sound waves strike the hillside, or the walls of the auditorium, and float back to you.

In ancient times people didn't know what caused echoes. So they made up stories to try to explain them. The most beautiful story is one which comes from the Greeks, who told it about 2,500 years ago.

According to them, a nymph named Echo fell in love with Narcissus, the son of a river god. Narcissus did not care about the nymph, but spent most of his time admiring the reflection of his own handsome face in the pools of the stream.

Echo, who was deeply refused to see and shake away with nothing remained of her but her voice. When the Greeks heard sounds returning to their ears, they said it was the voice of Echo.

Narcissus kept looking at himself in the water until he was dead. Then the Greeks said, the gods changed him into the beautiful flower which bears his name.

Has Old Father Time caught up with you? Remember that there are two ways of growing old—physically and mentally. With magazines, lectures, radio, art, music and science at your fingertips, you need never grow old or stale mentally. Keep your mind open to fresh issues and attitudes.

Nature has a way of changing us but never try to combat this by refusing to reveal your age when it is necessary to state it, or by dressing in extremely youthful styles to try to conceal it. Pleasant dignity is associated with older folks. Be proud to claim it and do not envy youths who because they have not had opportunities to develop philosophies of life above petty happenings are constantly undergoing doubt and uncertainty. No matter how our bodies might change throughout the years we need never let our minds stagnate. The present day magazines are replete with information which can give us suitable subjects to talk on if we are not inclined toward the weightier reading material. But by all means—do not grow dull. One becomes a bore to oneself as well as to everyone else when one allows himself to grow lax mentally. Start out this new year by determining to learn at least one new thing every day, and watch your reserves improve.

During the days of Madame de Pompadour, parties were in great favor. In fact, they formed an important part of the lady's household expenses, reported to have been $100,000 in a single year. Perhaps that is why Madame was so attractive. One always hovers around something pleasant. Have you ever thought of spraying the bed linen with a light fresh cologne when you are expecting guests? The fragrance is said to encourage sleep and make the bed seem actually more comfortable. At any rate, it offers a luxurious sense of well-being. About nine years ago we had a little experience which taught us the importance of scent. We were expecting a brief visit from our boss, who was to spend the night with us. Feeling that the pillows in the guest bedroom might be a little musty from not being used or aired for a time we sprinkled a little fabric scented inside the alpine and kept our fingers crossed. Just the other day we received a Christmas card from the same friend from Washington with and at the bottom of the card he had written, "I still think about the night I spent as your guest and how fragrant your pillows were." We had forgotten about the incident but he hadn't.

Try the trick when you are especially tired. It makes you feel heavenly.

In a recent survey to try to determine what men liked best or did not like at all about women, 90% of the boys stated that one of the things they enjoyed most was the "scent" of a woman.

One woman who was asked what she liked most about men, replied, "The way they smell when they are clean and fresh."

So, if you are a woman, try to keep your clothes smelling fresh and clean. If you are a man, try to keep your body smelling fresh and clean.

It is a good idea to keep a small bottle of cologne or perfume handy for emergencies. It will come in handy when you are out of breath or when you are feeling tired.
